

#FightRacism

Educating for Social Justice

Join us for a lecture and critical discussion!

When: Thursday April 21, 2016. 4:00 PM – 6:00 PM

Where: New Centennial Building Auditorium, Room 1041 in The College of Engineering

What: Dr. Nana Osei-Kofi invites you to engage in critical praxis (on-going self-reflection and action) about the contours of fighting racism and educating for social justice.

“In what ways can intersectionality--connecting race, gender, class and other interlocking systems of oppression, power, and privilege--inform the ways in which we make meaning of new social movements including #BlackLives Matter, #SayHerName, and the numerous Campus Speak Outs we have seen in the past year?”

Nana Osei-Kofi, PhD is Director of the Difference, Power, & Discrimination Program and Associate Professor of Women, Gender, & Sexuality Studies at Oregon State University (OSU).
